MADE A KEY OF TIN.

MOW NICHOLAS PROPOSED TO LIBERATE HIMSELF AND OTHERS.

Reasons and Others Implicated in the Piot.—How the Timely Discovery Was Made.

Philip N. Nicholas, the white man charged with the murder of James Mills and Judeon Wilkinson, has begun to sigh for bberty, and it cunning and treachery merit a reward the certainly deserves to be freed from prison. For nearly six months he has paced the gloomy corridors of the Henrice county jail, and as the days of his incarceration have turned to weeks and the weeks to months he has become more and more restless. Recently his desires for liberty have assumed the form of desperation, and his desperation has developed into a degree of cunning that seems almost like fiction.

Yesterday the officers of the jail discovered a plot among the prisoners to the plot, and the rest in the prison were aware of the plot, and to a transfer of the plot, and the rest in the prison were aware of the plot, and the first in the prison were aware of the plot, and the first in the prison were aware of the plot, and the first in the prison were aware of the plot, and the first in the prison were aware of the plot, and the first in the prison were aware of the plot, and the first in the prison were aware of the plot, and the first in the prison were aware of the plot, and the first in the prison were aware of the plot, and the first in the prison were aware of the plot, and the first in the prison were aware of the plot, and the prison prison

Monday Mr. L. I. Fussell, the jailer, was absent from the city and beputy-shoriff John Voceler acted as custodian of the prison. The latter had Mr. Fussell's keys, and while noding them in his hand he looked down in the yard and saw a key lying on the ground. Thinking it had fallen off the bunch he picked it up, when, to his surprise, he noticed that it was made of tin, which had been bent double and then cut into its piesent shape. Mr. Vocefer called he latter, upon examination, observed that it was a duplicate to the one need to lock the cells on the first floor the prison. The "fake" key was a arvei of mechanical skill, despite the unitre dits material and the roughness the instruments with which it was also Becoming suspicious at once. F. Fussell sent for Rob Turpin, one the prisoners, who is employed at the last cock and frequently acts as turner, and questioned him closely. continued the witness. "Finally when Nicholas lidn't get the money to go away with Emmanuel commenced searching for the things he had sidden."

Houseman said Nicholas was to give him enough money to get to Canada with. Nicholas expected to get it trom his brother, but the latter redused to furnish it. The wilness did not seem to think that Nicholas's brother favored the plot if he knew anything about it. Houseman stated that he refused to take any part in the scheme until he found out positively that the supposed murchere was going to furnian him with money. The key was made from the top of a small mustard-box. Nicholas copied the design from the original on a piece of paper. Turpin lent him the key for five nimutes, and he horrowed a knills from a man named Wingfield. Nicholas first tried toget Turpin to steal one of the duplicate Keys and the latter refused to do so, but finally loaned him Mr. Finasol's branch, Houseman admitted that he had assetted Nicholas is making several other keys, which had either been broken up and destroyed or histon. The witness stated that he really had but little to do with the affair, but confessed without heatting that he would willingly have escaped had he thought his chances for freedom good.

Several other witnesses were examined, but their testimony was substantially the same as that given above. The last man questioned was hichons, who looked haggard and downcast. At first he assimulated the most abject stupidity.

"You are charged," said Mr. Sands, "with the minimon of breaking jail. I don't want you to make any remarks except voluniarity. If you choose you can make a statement and if not you can keep quiet," can keep quiet."

The wretched prisoner hesitated a moment and then said: "it would be wrong for me to tak to you about it. I might injure myself. I will tak with my counsel, but I will tell you now I never had any more idea of going out here than I had of fiving."

"Did you ever see this before?" asked Mr. Sands, showing him the scrow-driver.

"John Houseman brought that thing down here," said Nicholas. "I don't knew anything more about that than you do."

The prisoner's answers were all disconnected he prisoner's answers were all disconnected

The prisoner's answers were all disconnected and foolish—in fact, it looked very much as if ne was trying to piny "cray." By degrees Mr. sands made him confess nearly everything. "Houseman and myself made the ker," said the prisoner, "but I can bring three witnesses to show that I did not want to get out of here." The supposed murderer said that the other prisoners were all against him and plotting for his ruin. He stated that when the scheme to escape was first begun he made the key just to show the county officers that he could have escaped, but don't want to. The evidence of nearly all the prisoners was against him. Nicholas denied that he had ever attempted to bribe luryin in order to get the keys. His replies to the various questions asked showed that he was much actied, while his face throughout fadicated the meat protound worry and agitation.

After the investigation Mr. Sands ordered that Nicholas should be kept in close confinement increater and showed to see no one but his counsel.

These lots are attractively platted, with fronts of 30 feet by a depth of 125 feet to wide alleys; are in the direction of the best suburban growth, and, seld under the present unfavorable conditions, present an opportunity for buying a home-site at haif price or for a big speculation as certain as anything can be.
